

Last Chance to Design YOUR new Shaw Library

~ final library design meeting ~

THURS. SEPTEMBER 4, 2008

6:30PM to 8:30PM

at the Watha T. Daniel-Shaw Interim
Library -- 945 Rhode Island Avenue, NW

DCPL is about to build a 20th Century
library that you will have to be content
with for the next 60 years... please consider getting involved now before
it's too late.

www.librarydynamo.org

202-294-3693 or 202-387-8030

Last Chance to Design YOUR new Shaw Library

~ final library design meeting ~

THURS. SEPTEMBER 4, 2008

6:30PM to 8:30PM

at the Watha T. Daniel-Shaw Interim
Library -- 945 Rhode Island Avenue, NW

DCPL is about to build a 20th Century
library that you will have to be content
with for the next 60 years... please
consider getting involved now before
it's too late.

www.librarydynamo.org

202-294-3693 or 202-387-8030

Many professional DC residents have had their comments captured at design meetings. However, DC Library leadership has failed to act on requests and suggestions leaving people feeling willfully dismissed. Taxpayers are paying tens of millions of dollars for these designs and highly paid DCPL staff with meaningless oversight by the Board of Library Trustees.

Some of these unanswered comments and questions include:

- Where's a dedicated space for adult literacy training considering the literacy divide in Shaw and DC as a whole?
- Shaw asked for a café to make their library more of a destination. Chief Librarian Cooper says it's not feasible and will not produce a study showing so.
- There is no dedicated space for a computer lab despite the overwhelming desire to have one -- instead a librarian is expected to set up and breakdown a laptop computer lab every time a class is to be held. Given the digital divide, Shaw librarians will be quite busy troubleshooting laptops for a lab setup while other library patrons have to wait for service.
- There are no plans to make the building expandable in the future
- DCPL is rumored to be shelving the green roof and have not looked at other active green power sources to offset rising energy costs.

Many professional DC residents have had their comments captured at design meetings. However, DC Library leadership has failed to act on requests and suggestions leaving people feeling willfully dismissed. Taxpayers are paying tens of millions of dollars for these designs and highly paid DCPL staff with meaningless oversight by the Board of Library Trustees.

Some of these unanswered comments and questions include:

- Where's a dedicated space for adult literacy training considering the literacy divide in Shaw and DC as a whole?
- Shaw asked for a café to make their library more of a destination. Chief Librarian Cooper says it's not feasible and will not produce a study showing so.
- There is no dedicated space for a computer lab despite the overwhelming desire to have one -- instead a librarian is expected to set up and breakdown a laptop computer lab every time a class is to be held. Given the digital divide, Shaw librarians will be quite busy troubleshooting laptops for a lab setup while other library patrons have to wait for service.
- There are no plans to make the building expandable in the future
- DCPL is rumored to be shelving the green roof and have not looked at other active green power sources to offset rising energy costs.